Amherst lab closing may cost police

Increased costs, court backlog feared

AMHERST, Mass. (WWLP) - The Patrick Administration is planning to close down a state-owned drug lab on the UMass Amherst campus next month, and some local police chiefs are speaking-out against the change.

The lab, the only state-owned drug lab in Western Massachusetts, tests all of the drugs that local police departments collect. The only other lab of its kind in the state is in Boston.

The Patrick Administration is planning the closing to save money, but Amherst Police Chief Scott Livingstone told 22News that this is going to cost all of the local police departments more money and hassle to bring their drugs all the way to Boston.

"The added expense for overtime for officers, the added expense for gas involved, backlogged the court process, all of those are concerns of ours," Livingstone said.

Livingstone also said that the Boston drug lab already takes one month to get results back, so this could slow down the process by which Massachusetts fights drug crimes.

Hi All:

Per Steve's note below...Joe's interview with WBUR/NPR ran through the morning on Friday, 8/19.

Again, Joe, you did a great job.

Bridget, any of these clips in particular you might wish to have copies of for distributing to legislators and such? This one from News Tendency.com (I've attached a paste up) was most interesting...closing with Sen. Rosenberg saying he is meeting this Weds with Commish Auerbach to "discuss the situation."

Also, here is a great link to the Springfield CBS affiliate story that featured police leaders lamenting the decision...great for that all important multi-party support impression. Granted, it does not mention M.O.S.E.S., but it was Joe's good work that opened the dialogue at all.

Here's the sound. It ran several times during Friday's morning drive, as well as mid-morning through noon.

Enjoy!
